HANDLING FRUITS FOR THE DISTANT MARKETS

Care in Picking and Packing Essential to Development of the New Outlets.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 5.—The importance of careful picking and handling in preventing decay in such fruits as cherries and prunes is brought out in Bulletin 331 of the United States Department of Agriculture, which contains a report of experiments conducted with these fruits in the Willamette valley, Oregon. Hitherto it has not usually been found profitable to ship fresh cherries and prunes from this region to distant markets because of the unsatisfactory condition in which the products arrive. These investigations demonstrate that a great part of the decay can be prevented by the exercise of proper care, but that unless care is exercised there is little hope of disposing of the fresh cherry and prune crop of this region in distant markets. The facts brought out in the investigation are believed to be applicable also to other sections of the country.

The losses which shippers of cherries and prunes experience are due chiefly to brown rot and to other fungi which gain entrance through abrasions in the skin, or other injuries to the fruit. The brown rot must be controlled by proper orchard practice. On the other hand, the loss from these forms of fungi which do not attack healthy, sound fruit can be minimized by careful handling.

In order to demonstrate this fact the investigators stored various lots of carefully handled fruit and of commercially handled fruit for varying periods in a refrigerator car, in which the conditions were made as nearly as possible identical with those under which the fruit would travel in actual commercial practice. At the end of 5 days in the cool car, the carefully handled fruit showed an average of only 0.5 per cent of decay, while the commercially handled fruit showed 2.3 per cent of decay, or practically 6 times the amount. At the end of 10 days the carefully handled fruit had 1.5 per cent of decay, and the commercially handled lots 12.3 per cent, or 8 times as much. Ten days is approximately the time required to ship fruit from the Willamette valley to Chicago.

Similar results were obtained from experiments with prunes, although with them the percentage of decay for both commercially handled and carefully handled fruit was smaller than with cherries. It is pointed out, however, that although every effort was made to have the conditions approximate those in actual transportation, it is probable that the fruit kept better in cool car used for these tests than it would in the ordinary refrigerator car in transit.

Experiments were also conducted both with carefully handled and commercially handled fruit to determine the value of pre-cooling before placing the fruit in the refrigerator car. These tests show that pre-cooling is undoubtedly of value. On the other hand, it can not be relied upon to prevent loss of fruit by decay when the fruit is pre-cooled in a careless handling. Injured fruit will decay whether it is pre-cooled or not, and for this reason pre-cooling is not recommended unless it is preceded by adequate care in picking and packing.

It is also pointed out that any delay between the picking and the shipping of fruit hastens decay. The amount of damage done in this way will vary, of course, with the weather conditions, but under any circumstances it is considerable.

In view of these facts it is recommended that every precaution should be taken in picking the fruit not to bruise it, and that it should be transferred as few times as possible from one container into another. While it is being held in the orchard after picking it should be kept in the shade and the hauling wagon should be provided with good springs and covered with canvas in order to keep off sun and dirt. In grading, all damaged fruit should be culled out, and as soon as the shipment has been packed it should be placed in the refrigerator car.

The extra expense of careful handling, it is said, will be more than offset by the reduction of losses from decay and the ability of the fruit to maintain itself in good condition while exposed for sale. If these suggestions are adopted generally by fruit growers and in consequence a larger proportion of the crop marketed fresh, it is believed that the industry will benefit greatly and its extension will be made profitable. That this fact is being recognized by fruit growers is indicated by the co-operation afforded the department in its investigation by the growers in the Willamette valley.

As the Atlanta Constitution says, Brand Whitlock may have had a rough voyage of it, but it seemed the only way to escape a vice presidential nomination.

WOODBURN HIGH SCHOOL DEBATE LOSE OUT

An interesting debate took place in this city between the Woodburn and Canby high school teams Friday night last at the Woodburn high school, the subject being, "Resolved, That the United States shall adopt the essential features of the Swiss system of military training and service." Woodburn taking the affirmative and Canby the negative. At the close of the debate in which all acquitted themselves very creditably, the judges gave a two to one decision in favor of the negative side. The Woodburn debaters were Elburn Sims, Edith Hawley and Geraldine Purdy. Those from Canby were Henry Zimmerman, Claire Haines and Ralph Hein. The judges were Charles H. Jones and Elmo S. White, of Salem, and William Hammond, of Oregon City. After the debate the senior class gave a banquet to the debaters, judges and faculty.

Friday night the Woodburn negative team, Raymond Lawrence, Lee Sims and Martin Brantman, went to Silverton to debate on the same subject with the high school affirmative team there, but there was no debate on account of the Silverton affirmative team having been sent that night to Canby instead of the negative team, Silverton having misunderstood the arrangement that only the negative teams of Canby, Silverton and Woodburn were to travel on that date. Next Friday the Woodburn negative team will again go to Silverton and there meet the Silverton high school affirmative team in debate. —Woodburn Independent.
